

Go Missions to Mexico

Relating to the People of Mexico

The following suggestions are offered to help you understand the people of Mexico and help you have a positive experience:

1. It is acceptable to express curiosity about the Mexican way of life. Your questions indicate an interest in their culture.
2. Don't make too many comparisons between Mexico and home. Constant comparisons that make Mexico seem inferior will eventually lead to resentment.
3. Try to understand strange customs, habits, and ways of thinking. Just because something is different does not mean it is wrong. Whether or not it is immediately apparent, there are reasons why Mexicans do things a certain way. Respect cultural differences even when you can't understand them.
4. When you don't understand something and find it difficult to be respectful, then at least suppress your disapproval. Some customs have been around for centuries, and no one likes to have a stranger mock their cherished traditions.
5. When you associate with the Mexican people, try and adopt their manners as much as possible. You will never become 100% Mexican, but trying will help you make friends and thus contribute to the ultimate success of your trip.
6. The bottom line is ... keep an open mind. Many aspects of the Mexican culture will interest, enchant, or puzzle you. Recognize the differences and accept them without passing judgment.
7. Familiarize yourself at least to some degree with the history of Mexico and the area to which you will be traveling.
8. Recognize and work with local leadership that is already established and esteemed by the people. We have worked hard to have a good name and ministry among the 150 plus churches to whom we minister. Please respect and ask any questions if you don't agree with something.
9. Remember that although you are in a foreign land, you will be respected for your own basic convictions. The adjustments to foreign mannerisms are not expected to alter your deep appreciation for our democratic ideologies. Many foreigners are hungry for a share of your basic convictions; so share them. This cross-fertilization of ideas will give rise to new ideas in the minds of the people. The most important aspect of your outreach program is not the contribution that you make to a new and different culture. Become aware of the needs of the people and see how directly the gospel relates to the fulfillment of these needs. Keep your heart and mind open and allow the Holy Spirit to perform a work in you that will be lasting, motivating, and life-changing.

10. Show respect for older people. Stand up and be prepared to give an appropriate greeting (a nod, a handshake, a bow, or whatever the specific culture expects). When circulating in a group, always take time to talk with older people.
11. Show respect for community leaders. Learn a few appropriate status titles (i.e., elder, brother, engineer, mayor, or nurse), and use them when you address these people. In general, avoid calling people simply by their first names. Listen, and ask people what's courteous.
12. Avoid being alone with or talking at length with someone of the opposite sex, especially if this isn't the custom. Dress modestly, whatever that means locally. Again, don't be afraid to ask.
13. Americans tend to talk quite a bit; so be sensitive to whether your new friends might like to express themselves, or whether they want to listen to you. Some people communicate through hints and metaphors, rather than frankness; some through satirical repartee and overstatements; some through stories. As a rule, well-told stories will be appreciated, including the stories of your life in Christ. Polish some of these anecdotes before you go.
14. Regarding time, be flexible and not uptight. Go with the flow of the culture and ministry in which you are involved.
15. Most people are more rooted in groups and family units than we are, so don't treat a friend as an isolated individual. Ask about his or her family and friends, and try to get to know them. Learn to tolerate a crowd. Likewise, talk positively about your family, and be ready to show photos (keep in mind that many foreigners can't understand your testimony if you say negative things about your family).
16. The big "No," "No," is anger. In Mexico, many Asian cultures, and in some tribal ones, losing your temper is just about the greatest sin possible. Defuse your explosive emotions in your journal or in prayer.
17. Be sure you don't offend people by taking photos of what they consider their private space or of what they consider to be a negative aspect for their country.
18. In Mexico, you will be a prime target for beggars. Many have learned that their generous friends to the North will give to anyone who appears in need. This wonderful characteristic, though, can actually be used against you and harm the people of Mexico. If you give to whoever appears needy, you'll actually teach and encourage them to continue begging. Many can earn more begging than by a regular job. Many will actually dress "poor," so you'll give them something. Many do not wear shoes, as this is part of their culture. Be careful not to bring your culture down to Mexico and think that what is true in the U.S. is true in Mexico.
